

The Cut-and-Paste Personality

Contributed by Leslie Karsner

More info...

These identity thieves don't want your money. They want your quirky sense of humor and your cool taste in music. Among the 125 million people in the U.S. who visit online dating and social-networking sites are a growing number of dullards who steal personal profiles, life philosophies, even signature poems. Dude u like copied my whole myspace, posts one aggrieved victim.

The Coachman Show 1955-1957

When the first episode of Mad Fabricators Society was released, I immediately saw three things - talent, passion, and potential. Each episode that Piero has released since has just gotten better and better and as Ive gotten to know Pieros work, Ive also gotten to know him as a person. Put short, weve become pals It only made sense then that I contacted Piero first when I became interested in starting a new video feature on The Jalopy Journal. After throwing some ideas back and forth, P

Open Question: Would you move to California or stay in Phoenix based on this situation.?

Today I was digging for some info on big bookstore and came across the following paragraph: Driving into town, Brown stopped at the Barnes & Noble bookstore and bought two Spanish-English dictionaries, one for him and one for her. One day, while the couple was still dating, Carrillo confided something to Brown: She was in the U. S. illegally. Brown was surprised at first. But he didnt think it was a big deal. source: Open Question: Would you move to California or stay in Phoen

{mos_sb_discuss:2}